"Mr. Bowser iald himself down upon the lounge and sighed and muttered and cussed. He said that if he got to raving and biting the doors and picture frames I should at once lock myself in my room. He did not want to bite me if he could help it, but would bite the cook in seventeen places if he got the

"Just then the doorbell rang, and I went down the hall to answer it. It was a tramp who wanted a dime to pay for his lodging. I shook my head and shut the door on him, and when I returned I had to explain to Mr. Bowser who it was and what he wanted. The minutes passed away, and he was about to take me to telephone the doctor when there came another ring at the door. It was the same tramp, and he wanted the same dime to pay for the same lodgings. I gave him to understand that I had a police whistle in the house, and he went away muttering.

"Instead of replying I rubbed some witch hazel on that dreadful wound, and it acted to calm Mr. Bowser. So I said in a soothing voice, I think, my dear, you could get upstairs to bed with my help.'

"Never, Mrs. Bowser! The moment I moved around it would bring the end. Just feel of my heart and see how tumultuously it beats.'

"I put my hand over his heart, and there was no tumult going on. I was about to say so when the bell rang once more. It was that same tramp again, and this time when I refused him his dime he impudently replied:

"It is people like you who drive us poor men to crime and desperation. A dime is nothing to you, while it means a bed for me tenight."

"If you will come around here tomorrow I will give you work by which you can earn 50 cents or a dollar, I said.

"If you will come around here tomorrow I will give you work by which ou can earn 50 cents or a dollar, I said.

"Bah!" he exclaimed. 'I want that dime tonight—right away now!"

I heard a grunt from Mr. Bowser as he rolled off the lounge and came galloping down the hall. He had heard enough to cure him of his hydrophobia. Without asking a word he selsed that tramp and turned him around and booted him down the steps and ran him out of the gate. It was with his bitten leg that he kloked. We had been back in the sitting room about two minutes when he said:

"The feeling that I was going to die with rables has departed. Let's go to bed, for I want to get up good and early in the morning."

She Knew a Windfall

"W HY, these apples are dirty!" complained the young

"Well, yes; they are," admitted the farmer. "You see they are windfalls, and that is why I can sell them so

"You mean they've fallen from the trees on to the ground, but they are otherwise all right?" the customer inquired. Then, proud of her ready understanding, she bought them.

Several days later she called the farmer's wife on the telephone.

"I ordered the best cucumbers for pickling," she said sharply, "and you've sent me windfalls." "Sent what?" gasped the farmer's wife.

"Windfall cucumbers. I can tell. You needn't think I can't. There's dirt on them."—Youth's Companion. ~~~

Do You Think You Know?

T HE late Henry James, the novelist, used to poke a good deal of fun at "pragmatism," his brother William's new kind of philosophy.

"Philosophy," he once said, "has been likened to a blind man searching a dark room for a black hat that isn't there. "Fragmatism, on the other hand, rather reminds me of the dialogue of Mike and Pat.

'Can I know what I don't know?' says Mike. "'No.' says Pat.

Well, there's a certain thing I don't know, and I know Then don't I know what I don't know?

Extreme Heat Too Much for Curley, Gov't Prisoner.

"I Don't Care if I Do Die," He Told His Doctor.

The federal government came near losing Ben McIntosh, alias Curley the not attempt to escape. He is too old not attempt to escape. eH is too old and too much of a philosopher to try anything so commonplace as that. He came near dying. A physician worked over him for a long time before he was out of denger.

Seventy years, lived no one but Curley knows how, the extreme heat, lack of exercise and a chronic case of asthma conspired last night to end Curiey's days.

Curley's days.

"I don't care if I do die," he told Charles Hixon, night jailer. "What have I, a man of 70 years of age and a federal prisoner, to live for?"

But Hixon did not want him to die, at least not during his watch, and he called a physician. McIntosh is out of danger today, but the indications are that jail and penitentiary life will shorten his days.

Preparations Being Made Purchase Unmerged Line.

Court Decisions Expected to Clear the Way Soon.

San Francisco, Aug. 5.—Preparations are being made by the legal and financial departments of the Union Pacific to buy the Central Pacific property in case the United States circuit court of appeals decides that the Southern Pacific must part with the Central Pacific road. It is expected that the decision will be filed in Salt Lake within the next week or tendays.

When in Salt Lake this spring, President Robert S. Lovett said that the Union Pacific stood ready at any time to take over the Central Pacific propulation of the Inches and the Inches Inches Inches Inches Inches erty, which includes the line from Og-den to San Francisco and various feed-ers and terminal property in Califor-nia, if the right price was named, Pay Hundred Million.

Pay Hundred Million.

Lovett was willing to pay about $100,000,000 for the Central Pacific when the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific were unmerged some years ago, but his plan was upset by the railroad commission of California, which refused to grant exclusive rights to the use of he Sacramento-Benecia tracks and all spurs and terminal property to Lovett's roads and the unmerged Southern Pacific, thus shutting out any participation of the Western Pacific and Santa Fe should they desire it

Advices from Salt Lake are that a force of Union Pacific engineers have been going over the Central Pacific and have been making estimates as to what it would cost to duplicate the road. The Oregon Short Line and other Union Pacific men at Salt Lake are sanguine that the decision of the United States court will favor unmerging, and are already laying their plans for business after the Union Pacific shall have bought the Central property.

Fight Not Over.

Fight Not Over. Equal confidence is expressed at Southern Pacific headquarters here that the decision will be against compelling the Southern Pacific to part with the Central route and its still more valuable terminal property, feeders and spur tracks in California.

If the decision is against the Southern Pacific, an appeal will be at once taken to the United States supreme court.
